

What other service providers in the Network have said

What managers want from a Collaborative Practice Meeting:

- The top priority for people was that organisations and managers have the opportunity to help each other
- The next highest rated was a desire to know 'who is who in the zoo'. People don't know who their potential partners are.
- People want the PCMs to be used to identify and respond to service gaps
- To be a mechanism through which they could get updates on critical issues
- PCMs to create a space where orgs can learn from each other
- Be an opportunity to build trust between organisations

Structurally managers want meetings to be:

- Short and efficient
- Well structured and well chaired
- Have established TOR
- Be outcomes focused

What people don't want:

- Taking too much time away from other things
- Having to travel far to attend
- If meetings we after hours
- Ideas that are not grounded/connected to a genuine capacity to deliver
- Repeat training or info
- Regurgitating info already available
